

1. What was the most impressive moment for you and why ?

To be fair, I find the whole meeting happening as expected and nothing super surprising. However, I was impressed with the fact that Thai political parties and leaders were finally able to come to the conclusion that they agreed with each other. On top of that, despite the debate that they wanted to extend the selection date I am happy and impressed that they were able to come to a conclusion right away today, instead of making this debate a never ending issue that keeps going back and forth. I was also impressed that they were able to make a promise to have another election within 4 months. I think that this gives us a hope to once again elect the candidate that we, Thai citizens, wish to see in office and want the country to be led by them. Finally, I personally find that the deadline of 4 months given to Anutin will be a good pressure for the government to actually do something beneficial for our country and try to improve things.

2. What was the most disappointing moment for you and why?

While I was watching the live stream, I noticed that there was a guy falling asleep in the background. He almost fell from the chair so it is clear he was definitely sleeping. Although I did not understand some part of the debate due to language barrier I could sense from the atmosphere of the room that a lot of these politicians do not put in as much care and effort as they should. Other than this, there was another guy in the background giggling while on his phone. I wonder which netflix series he was watching. The fact that politicians that are supposed to improve the lives of citizens and have a responsibility of running a country are getting paid by sleeping on their working hours makes me disappointed.

3. What do you think will happen in Thai politics over the next few months according to the outcome of today's House meeting ?

Now that an election in 4 months is promised, I believe that all the parties and leaders will try their best to attract the supporters. Especially people that do not have a specific political party that they support. This could mean that current PM Anutin can practice policies that solve our current poor economy. However, realistically it is hard to get things done and show significant progress in just 4 months. Therefore I think that it is just going to be a buffer period before the election could occur again. The people's party will definitely increase their popularity and the fall of Pua Thai party is clear.