

What's the [hell] PM selection today?

1. What was the most impressive moment for you, and why?

The most striking moment was when Chaloem Yubamrung voted for Anutin Charnvirakul. It was as if he was openly rejecting Thaksin Shinawatra, despite having been politically aligned with him for many years. This vote symbolized that Thaksin no longer has the same level of support.

2. What was the most disappointing moment for you, and why?

I was disappointed that the range of choices was so limited. The People Party was compelled to vote for Anutin Charnvirakul simply as a strategy to push for the dissolution of the House.

3. What do you think will happen in Thai politics over the next few months according to the outcome of today's House meeting?

In the coming months, I anticipate that Thai politics will be shaped by Anutin's leadership as prime minister. He is likely to prioritize developments in cannabis legislation and the land dispute at Khao Kradong in Buriram. In addition, with the dissolution of the House expected within four months, politicians will likely concentrate on campaigning, designing strategies, launching projects to appeal to voters, and negotiating alliances both within and beyond Parliament. However, this preoccupation with electoral positioning may create vulnerabilities, particularly in the realm of national stability and governance.
