

- 1. What was the most impressive moment for you, and why?

For me, the most impressive part of this debacle is how this is not the first time this kind of event had happened in Thai politics although the last time it happened was when Thailand was in an age of instability. To be able to witness this in my lifetime is something to behold indeed. The fact that we might be having to vote for another prime minister in four months time is also quite intriguing because it would be the first time I will be able to take part in one of the most integral steps in a democratic system.

- 2. What was the most disappointing moment for you, and why?

If I have to pick, the most disappointing part would have been the fact that the vote has been postponed once, the reason is that this moment highlight, in my opinion, a flaw that has been in the system for a long time, which is the fact that any meeting will be automatically canceled or postponed if the members did not show up in time.

- 3. What do you think will happen in Thai politics over the next few months according to the outcome of today's House meeting?

I think Anutin Charnvirakul would act according to the MOU between his party and the people's party that he will dissolve the parliament after four months. On the other hand, I would like to see how the issue with the Shinawatra family will be dealt with, will they be punished in some way or will they flee the country like what they had done many times before. It would also be very interesting to see how Anutin will lead the country.
