

In Class [homework] Individual Activity: What's The [hell] PM Selection Today?

1. What was the most impressive moment for you, and why?
 1. The most impressive moment was seeing Anutin Charnvirakul's votes piling up and gaining enough support from many parties such as the deep blue side and the orange party which are from the far left and the far right side in the parliament. Securing more than 300 votes, this shows the unity within the Thai politics where deals are compromised to unite the country and revive from the lost of belief in the Pheu Thai Party. In conclusion, I am most impressed with how fast Thailand can move forward after the sudden removal of the previous PM in a synchronous pattern.
2. What was the most disappointing moment for you, and why?
 1. The most disappointing moment was realizing that the new government will only be here for a temporary course, leading to less administrative activities. This means that the government may not be stable or have that much strength to pass any reforms. To me it felt disappointing because many people including me was hoping for a government that could bring a long-term solution and real changes to the Thai society; meanwhile, this is only a short-term arrangement to buy time for the next election.
3. What do you think will happen in Thai politics over the next few months according to the outcome of today's House meeting?
 1. I believe that over the next few months Thai politics will be very active as each party will be fighting to win votes in the upcoming election which is coming up very soon. There will likely be many debates and setup for the new election leading to lesser administrative actions in each ministry. The push for drafting a new constitution for the people's party will also be an issue as the signing of the MOU can create pressure from many political parties which could lead to many challenges and heated arguments within the parliament, causing parties to split up and create minority groups.