Principles and mechanisms of Vienna Settlement

- Balance of Power . . . as the agreed-upon means to maintain status quo / peace & stability in Europe

The influence of the Age of Reason made statemen perceive Balance of Power . . .

- as the operation of the universe
- as the great clockwork

The Settlement laid down new territorial arrangement with the purpose of creating a relative balance of power

. . . it was the balance of power “manually-managed”

In contrast to . . .

‘Mechanical’ balance of power

. . . naturally emerges from power politics of previous era

- F. retained its former territory . . .

“France was deprived of its conquests, but granted its “ancient” – that is, prerevolutionary – frontiers . . . They agreed that Europe would be safer if France were relatively satisfied rather than resentful and disaffected.” Kissinger

- New arrangement in German land . . . The German Confederation

— From 300 states to 39 states with an assembly in Frankfurt

— Making it not too weak or too strong !!

“The impressive thing about the behaviour of the Powers in 1815 is that they were prepared, as they had never previously been prepared, to waive their individual interests in the pursuit of an international system. . . . they were prepared to waive their individual interests because it was in their individual interests to do so. They had recognized for the first time that it was in their interests to do so.”

“The principle of equilibrium has been succeeded by a principle of general union, uniting all the states by a federative bond under the direction of the 5 principal Powers. . . . The states of the second, third and fourth rank have placed themselves, tacitly and without any stipulation on this point, under the decisions taken jointly by the preponderant Powers; and Europe at last forms a single great political family.” H.

➤ Quadruple Alliance

Britain , Russia , Austria , Prussia

➤ Holy Alliance

Austria , Russia , Prussia

___ Conservative Eastern Courts

“ Paradoxically, this international order, which was created more explicitly in the name of the balance of power than any other before or since, relied the last on power to maintain itself . . .

This unique state of affairs occurred partly because the equilibrium was designed so well that it could only be overthrown by an effort of magnitude too difficult to mount. But the most important reason was the Continental countries were knit together by a sense of shared value.” K.
